Keynote Description:

Make Your Contribution Count:

Re-imagine. Re-energize. Re-emerge.

What if...

...we all have a role to play in our social and economic re-emergence?

The global pandemic has amplified many of the social, economic, and environmental gaps that exist. Although addressing societal gaps has always been necessary, it will be essential during economic and social re-emergence. Organizations small and large will need to re-imagine and re-energize their offering to meet the social needs to benefit communities and their businesses.

Clients and consumers are more exposed to the power of collaboration and what is possible when we re-imagine our offerings. Research shows that before the pandemic, consumers were making more conscious buying decisions. The trend will amplify as we recognize our interdependence. Now more than ever, we need each other to elevate society.

Suzanne F. Stevens will share thought-provoking and inspiring stories of how people internationally re-imagined their situation and were able to amplify their impact through innovation, commerce, and collaboration. The audience will be inspired to reflect on how to help and not hurt, and how to do good while doing well—making their contribution count for you, me, we.
