Keynote Description:

Collaborate to make your company's contribution count:

Engaging employees collectively in contributions they care about What if...

...you can attract, engage, and retain your employees on their terms while meeting your mandate?

The global pandemic has highlighted and expanded the social gaps that exist. Organizations small and large will need to re-imagine and re-energize their businesses to meet the social needs to benefit their colleagues, customers, and the community or beyond.

Colleagues seek more meaning at work, and a vital way to provide it is creating space for employees to contribute to what they care about. Traditional forms of corporate giving don't offer collaboration with colleagues and, therefore, limit the business's benefits. If there is collaboration, often employee commitment to the cause is lacking. Through an interactive keynote, employees connect to each other and what they care about, launching a framework to make their contributions count: the result, accelerating employee connection, engagement, and loyalty while contributing to the community.

Suzanne F. Stevens, founder of YouMeWe Social impact Group, shares a dynamic, thought-provoking, and inspiring stories and strategies on how organizations can collaborate to have a social impact. With interactive keynotes, the audience will be motivated to ask: "How do I make my contribution count for me, my organization, and my community?"

What will the audience experience during this keynote?

The audience will be inspired, informed, connected, entertained and motivated to act! Suzanne will take the audience on a journey, challenge perceptions, connect individuals to each other and what they care about, expose compassion-connections™, promote collaborations, and inspire participants to ask: "What role will WE play in making a sustainable social impact?"
